must, differently expressed, 1, by gerundive = a necessity inferred from the circumstances of the case, e.g. people, we, you, etc. — die, moriendum est ; one — confess that every living creature is mortal, confitendum est omne animal esse mortale ; the person by which a thing is to be done in the dative, very seldom by ab, and only when a second dative would make the meaning ambiguous and obscure ; e.g. everyone — use his own judgment, suo cuipque iudicio utendum est ; the property of many citizens is at stake, of which you — take every care, ognitur bona multorum civium, quibus a robis consulendum est (here a robis on account of quibus, Cic., who in another passage has also two datives with the gerundive) ; we — take the same road, hac via (nobis) ingredienda ; one — know nature, noescenda est natura ; the speaker — consider three points, tria ridenda sunt oratori ; 2, by oporet (impersonal δεῖ, expressing a necessity inferred from reason, or from the law, or from prudence or justice), with the accus. and infln., or merely with the subjunctive mood ; 3, = by debere (θέλεσθαι), to express a moral obligation, e.g. you — honour him like your father, cum patris loco colere debes ; if we were affected in seeing the misery of our allies, what — we now do when we see our own blood shed? sociorum miseria commorebamur, quid nunc in nostro sanguine facere debemus? Debet, therefore, is nearly = officium, so that we can also express — by officium est alejs and simply est alejs, e.g. a stranger — mind only his own affairs, peregrini officium est (i.e. peregrinus debet) nihil prout suum negotium agere ; a good orator — have heard much, est boni oratoris (i.e. bonus orator debet) multa auribus accipisse. Officium is gen. left out in I, you —, meum, tuum, restum est ; 4, by putare and existimare, in the rhetorical style, as a form of politeness, so that the hearers may be allowed to come to a conclusion themselves about a point, e.g. you see to what a pitch the republic — proceed, ridete quoniam in locum rem publicam perventuram putatis ; 5, by opus est (impersonal χρῆν), in speaking of any event subjectively felt, and from the supplying of which we expect great advantages ; either with accus. and infin., or if the person who — do, etc., a thing is added in the dative, ut with subjunctive mood, e.g. if anything should happen which you — know (which it is useful for you to know), I'll write to you, si quid crit, quod te scire opus est, scribam; I — go and wash myself, michi opus est ut larem. Also, I — have so and so may be rendered by michi opus est, either impersonally with abl., or personally with the nominative of the person or thing that — be had, e.g. we — have a guide, dux et auctor nobis opus est; we — use your authority, auctoritate tuā nobis opus est; 6, by necessē est (impersonal, ávaykñ ērrī), expressing necessity, either with accus. and infin., or simply with subjunctive mood, e.g. this mortal frame of ours — (necessarily) perish some time, corpus mortale alqō tempore perire necessē est; 7, by facēc non possum, or simply non possum with quin, etc., or fici non potest with ut non, etc., or non possum non with infin., to express what cannot be avoided, inward necessity, e.g. I — exclaim, non possum quin exclamem; 8, simply by the verb: in the indicative, inasmuch as in Latin we often leave it for the reader to supply in his own mind under what circumstances an action took place, e.g. I — confess, confideor (Ter.), factōr (Cic.); I — regret, doleo (Cic.); I — express my surprise, miror (Liv.); this one thing I — remark, unum illud dico; in the subjunctive, if we only speak of a supposed necessity, e.g. a circumstance, at which not only all educated people, but even savages — blush, o rem dignam, in qui non modo docti, verum etiam agrestes erubescant; 9, you — (as urgent appeal), either simply by the imperative mood, or by fac ut, e.g. if you are not satisfied with that, you — accuse your own injustice, haec si robis non probabuntur, restraint iniquitatem accusatoe; you — not (as an urgent warning, not to a thing), fac ne, etc. (= mind that not, etc.), cave ne (= take care lest, or not to, etc.), noli with infin., e.g. you — not wish, cave ne cupias.

II. (none), adj. nullus, nemo (nullus of persons and things, nemo of persons only), non nullus, non quisquam (= not one, if a greater stress is to be laid upon the negative; the former as an adj., the latter as a pronoun), neuter (= neither, must always be used if we speak of two individuals or of two parties); if nullus and nemo are used in a partitive sense, that is, if — stands in opp. to the remaining parts or the whole, they govern the genit. (e.g. — mortal, nemo mortalium; — animal is more prudent, nulla beluarum prudenter est); the genit. may also sometimes be expressed by a circumloc. with ile, ex (e.g. — man of our army was killed, nemo de nostris cedidit); sometimes it would appear that instead of nullus and nemo we use in Latin nihil (with genit. when it stands for nullus); however, nihil expresses the negative more strongly than nullus = none at all (e.g. there is — one (at all) more miserable than I am, and — one more happy than Catulus, nihil me infortunatus, nihil fortunatus est Catulo; to have — doubt (at all), nihil dubitationis habere); very often we use — when the negative does not refer to anything in general, but to something particular; in this case, which takes place principally when — belongs as an adj. to a noun or refers as a predicate to a noun previously mentioned, we use in Latin the negative non instead of nullus (e.g. you ordered them — ship, narem iis ion imperasti). We likewise use non in Latin for — when the object in English is expressed by a verbal noun (e.g. to have — fear, non timere; to feel — doubt, non dubitare; to feel — hatred against anyone, non odisse alqm, etc.); — one, nemo; at — place, nusquam; at — time, numquam (nunq., nullo tempore; and at — time, neq; unquam; in — respect, nihil; in — wise, nullo modo, nulla ratione). nobody, n. nemo, nullus (= no; as the genit. of nemo, neminis was little used, nullius was used instead), nemo homo; and —, neq; ullus, neq; quisquam; that —, ne quid; a —, terre filius. nowhere, adv. nusquam.

II. rel. pron. qui, quae, quod; see

Who. III. conj. to connect the main clause: A, when the sentence with — contains the subject of the copula in the main sentence; 1, when the sentence with — conveys a general idea, render by the inf., e.g. officie est, etc., or by another noun, e.g. nihil suarum est quam amari or amor, — nothing is more pleasing than — one should be loved; 2, use the accus. and inf., after "it is" pleasing, grievous, probable, clear, manifest, evident, true, it appears, it is useful, right, reasonable, necessary, lawful, it is allowed —"; after several of these impersonal verbs, use also quod and ut, see under C and D (e.g. it is pleasing to hear — you are well, gratum est te valere); 3, than —, as —, inf. with an adv. or another noun with an adj. or part., e.g. nullares tauto erat danno, etc., quam (a noun with an adj. or part.). B, when the sentence with — contains the object of the verb of the main clause, use acc. and infin.; 1, this is the case after all verbū sensuum et affectuum, to which belong also "to know, conceive, remind, expect, hope, fear, believe," etc.; then also after fie, when it is finge, fancy —, etc., fie qui ego sum esse te; after the verbs "to hope, swear, promise, threaten," we use the accus. and fut. infin., only after "to hope" we use the accus. and pres. infin. when we speak of anything referring to the present time, and the accus. and perf. infin. when we speak of anything past; 2, after the so-called verbū declarandi, as "to say, tell, indicate, remember, convince, teach, prove (efficere)," etc.; 3, also after "to fix, determine, wish, forbid, impose, concede (that anything is so)," etc., the intit., if the sentence with — declares the object, whilst if it contains a wish or intention, we use ut; after "they," "the people say," "it is reported," etc. (dicunt, tradunt, ferunt, produnt, perhibent), either by accus. and infin., or the nom. and indic. (of the passive voice), e.g. dicunt Romulum primum regem Romanum fuisse, or Romulus primus rex Romanorum fuisse dicebatur; dicunt vos uoluisse, or vos dicebamini uiduisse; after dubito, in the sense "I doubt not," we find in Cic. always quin. C, when the sentence with — contains a description of anything or a circumst., 1, of the subject, when we can put "which" instead of "—," by quod, as after "there is reason," or "there is no reason," (which, etc.), est (habet), non est, nihil est quod (we may also use cum, as in English); also after "it is pleasing, rejoicing, I am glad, it is painful," etc. (e.g. nihil est quod [i.e. illud quod] timeas); also after "we must add (eo or huc accedit)," where we use quod when we speak of a matter of fact, and ut when we refer to anything that is only in progress, always when the thing is only about to happen; 2, of the object when — = "because;" also by quod after "to be glad, rejoice (gaudere), to feel sorry, grieve (dolere), to wonder (mirari)," etc., where we use quod when we speak of a definite fact, but si, if we speak of something merely imaginary or as we suppose it; 3, when — stands for "inasmuch as, insofar as." D, always ut or qui (quae, quod) when the sentence with — expresses the purpose, condition, aim, effect, surmise, permission, encouragement, wish or command, as subject or object, or as additional clause; after is sum, non is sum, talis, qualis, is (such a one), cujusmodi, etc.; also qui, etc. (ut is, etc.), after tam, tantus, generally after negations, after quis? and after comparatives with quam, when these words express the degree, measure, up to which anything is said to possess a certain quality; and after nouns to express a purpose (e.g. Caesar sent messengers — they might say, Caesar nuntios misit qui dicent); but ut is, etc., to express result; — not, after "to fear, to be afraid," etc., ne non, seldom ut, and — alone.

ne; only — not, — by any means, ut ne (ne being placed before — which is prevented), e.g. ut hoc ne facrem (= he took care —, etc.); I say — . . . not, etc., by nego with accus. and infin., e.g. he asserts — there are no gods, deos esse negat. E, — in exclamations, I, when we express a wish, oh — ut! utinam! o si (see ON); God grant —, etc., futit Dens, ut, etc.; — not! utinam ne! 2, in general exclamations, by accus. and infin. (which apparently is not governed by any preceding verb), e.g. me miserum! te in tantas aerumnas propter me incidisse!

IMPORTANT NEW WORK.

Cassell's New French Dictionary.

(French-English and English-French.)

Edited by JAMES BOËLLE, B.A. (Univ. Gall.), Officier d'Académie, lately Examiner in French in the University of London ; Corresponding Member of "La Société des Gens de Lettres de France," etc. etc. 1,230 pages. Price 7s. 6d., bound in cloth ; or 10s. 6d., bound in half-leather.

"Quite the best Dictionary of its size that has been issued."—Globe.

"The best at the price in the market."—London Quarterly Review.

"The best French and English Dictionary of an ordinary size in existence."—Critical Review, Paris.

"The original dictionary was a good one ; the revised edition is a distinct improvement, and will be welcomed by a large number of persons who are in need of a trustworthy dictionary neither too high in price nor too unwieldy in size."—St. James's Gazette.

Cassell's French Dictionary. (FRENCH-ENGLISH and ENGLISH-FRENCH.) 711th Thousand. Revised. 1,150 pp., cloth, 3s. 6d. ; half-morocco, 5s.

"CASSELL'S FRENCH DICTIONARY has become a standard work in this country, being used in the best schools, recommended by many of the first professors of the day, and generally found a reference book of the highest value and importance."—Daily Chronicle.

Cassell's German Dictionary. (GERMAN-ENGLISH and ENGLISH-GERMAN.) 317th Thousand. 1,120 pp. Cheap Edition. Cloth, 3s. 6d. ; half-morocco, 5s.

"To say this is the best of the smaller German Dictionaries in the field is faint praise, and were it not for the special merits of one or two, we might, without exaggeration, say that Miss Weir is first, and the rest nowhere."—Journal of Education.

Cassell's Educational Catalogue will be forwarded post free on application.
